May 04, 2019

Dear Christy,

I am so happy to get your letter. I am so surprised that you are a Taurus according to your star sign. By the time you get my mail, you may be celebrating your birthday. So I send you a gift with this letter. It is a lucky charm with the sign of a bull. It is said to guarantee you luck, prosperity, happiness throughout the year.

The weather in Taiwan is extremely hot in May, and what I like to do on the weekend is go swimming at the beach or in a swimming pool to beat the heat or eat shaved ice at the stall. I like chocolate shaved ice. In fact, here we can add many sauces like chocolate, strawberry or mango to the shaved ice. If you come to Taiwan, I will definitely show you around and enjoy the delicious Taiwanese food and ice.

It is hard to imagine that you are wearing a heavy coat now and it is winter in your country. I love to watch movies, "The Lord of the Rings." And many of the scenes were shot in your country. The scenery is rather fantastic and exotic. Have you been there?

What do you usually do in May? I am curious about what you do over the weekends. I look forward to knowing more about your hobbies or interests next time.

I sincerely hope to hear from you soon and wish you a wonderful birthday.

Love,
Shirley

November 25th is the World Day against Foie Gras. Many people try to express opposition to the torture of force-feeding ducks and geese. Force-feeding causes severe pain and suffering. Over 30 million male ducks undergo this torture every year, in France alone. The fate of females is awful, too: part of them are killed shortly after hatching because they are just not profitable enough.

In order to produce Foie Gras, ducks and geese are force-fed with hydraulic pump, several times per day, until their livers grow up to 10 times their normal size. To stop the animals from escaping, they are limited in small cages where they can never stretch their wings. They have no access to swimming or washing water. During the force-feeding period, the mortality rate is up to 20 times more than in traditional bird rearing centers.

Besides the ruthless way of producing Foie Gras, what makes people concerned is that Foie Gras imports are still legal in most parts of the world. As the main Foie Gras producer, France is actively looking for export opportunities to expand its production. But countries like India have proved that a change is possible and many companies worldwide boycott the product. California is about to become the first state in the US to ban Foie Gras. The World Day against Foie Gras is an opportunity to raise awareness about force-feeding.

- (A) death (B) breeding
 (C) quarrel (D) forecast
36. What do people do to the animals in order to produce Foie Gras?
- (A) The animals sometimes stretch their wings and walk around.
 (B) The animals have to stay in a cage in their lifetime.
 (C) The poultry usually go swimming several times a day.
 (D) Ducks and geese happily enjoy tasty meals all the time.
37. According to the passage, which of the following statements is true?
- (A) 30 million ducks have to endure torture annually, including male and female ones.
 (B) The purpose of force-feeding ducks or geese is to get more meat and feathers.
 (C) The mortality rate of the force-fed ducks is ten times more than those in ordinary farms.
 (D) There is a conflict between making money and treating animals in a humane way.

An incredibly huge amount of trash is dumped into landfills every year around the globe. If you lined it up in garbage trucks, it could circle the Earth 24 times. Sweden has found a way to turn their trash into gold.

About half or 47% of Sweden's waste is recycled. The program recycles and sorts metals, plastics, newspapers, batteries, and electronics. The remaining 52% of the country's waste like excluded scrap, circuit boards, and agricultural waste is used for the country's waste-to-energy program, or WTE program, which produces electricity from burning waste. So what is left is one remarkable percent of Sweden's trash that actually ends up in a landfill.

But how exactly does garbage turn into energy? After recyclable content has been removed, the trash is brought to the waste-to-energy plant. There, the trash gets loaded into furnaces and burned, which generates a large amount of steam that spins generator turbines, producing electricity for the nation's power grid. On recycling, all leftover metals are separated and recycled while the other remaining materials that cannot be burned, like porcelain or tile, are collected for gravel in road construction. Over the past decade, Sweden has run out of their own garbage and had to start importing trash from other countries like UK. It's a win-win situation for most countries since shipping trash to Sweden is not only cheaper than landfill taxes, but it also makes sure more garbage is reused. Over time, Sweden has become a zero waste nation and encouraged other countries to consider it.

38. What is the main idea of this passage?
(A) Sweden is a democratic country that earns a lot of revenues.
(B) Sweden successfully exported garbage to UK and earned much money.
(C) Turning waste into energy is very effective in Sweden.
(D) Sweden is good at turning all the waste into road construction.
39. According to the passage, in Sweden, what percentage of the garbage ends up being buried in the landfill?
(A) 1%. (B) 24%. (C) 47%. (D) 52%.
40. According to the passage, which of the following can generate electricity?
(A) Silver. (B) Porcelain cups. (C) Newspapers. (D) Agricultural waste.
41. How does the trash turn into energy in Sweden?
(A) Energy is produced from the combination of solar energy and the trash.
(B) The burning trash produces vapor that propels turbines to produce electricity.
(C) The trash buried in the landfill produces the heat that generates electricity.
(D) They accept the trash from other countries and turn it into nuclear power.
